LEGACY

New info

Do you ever wonder about the legacy you'll leave? If you do wonder about such things, do your thoughts stretch beyond your own family? Do your aspirations reach your neighbors? Your community? Your world?

An interesting thing about libraries is that they are all about legacy. While libraries constantly update collections to provide the most current resources and items in popular demand they are also quietly preserving the histories of our culture and archiving our story for future generations. Less tangibly, libraries create legacy with access to the written word, environments for learning, cultural experiences and opportunities to engage with others in life changing ways.

This issue of info magazine contains more than words. Inside these pages you'll find book suggestions, resources, history, encouragement and heartfelt ways to make a difference in your world. In these pages, you will find ways to leave your legacy.

The Remarkable Private Smith

By Larry Johnson

A few weeks ago I had occasion to help a young man in his 80s in the Oklahoma Room. He arrived at the door with an armful of documents neatly arranged in file folders and, after introductions, he told me he had a story to tell and then he would need some help.

"I was an 18 year-old private at Camp Chaffee, Arkansas, in 1946," he began. "I made it into the Army, but I had missed the war. In early 1946 Chaffee was one of the processing centers where soldiers were sent for separation from the service. I was assigned to the camp newspaper, The Armodier, and my job was to interview all the guys who were leaving the service and send the stories to their hometown newspapers." The idea was that it might help ease the soldier's transition if people back home knew some of what he'd been through.

He was assigned to write a story about a private from Oklahoma City. He was taken aback by the thirtysomething age of the soldier as one didn't find a lot of buck privates that age. As the soldier's story unfolded he eventually learned the reason why.

The soldier was involved in several major campaigns in Europe in the fast-moving 82nd Reconnaissance Battalion. Near Mortain, France in the days after D-Day, Germany counterattacked with three Panzer divisions and the soldier's unit was cutoff and surrounded. As many of the men in his unit began surrendering, the soldier attempted to break out of the encirclement on his own. He not only broke out, he knocked out two machine gun nests, freed all the prisoners and took three prisoners of his own.

He was made a sergeant then, but a strange turn resulted in his demotion back to private a few days later. The soldier was wounded by gunfire in the shoulder, but refused treatment other than a bandage wrap. He fought on for three hours before capturing an SS Panzer division general in a farmhouse. He was ordered to hold the general until an interrogator arrived but a leader in the French Underground decided to take out swift justice on the general while under the soldier's watch and so he was busted back to private.

A few weeks later the soldier was part of a recon patrol that was first in liberating with two destroyed Tigers under his belt and 34 prisoners captured single-handedly, keeping the road open and his unit from being surrounded.*

Belgium but was soon in the famed Battle of the Bulge. There were reports of German tanks rolling through his area so he volunteered to setup a roadblock. His commander assigned some men to go with him but the soldier said he didn't want a bunch of children clinging to him so he grabbed a rifle and a bazooka and took off alone down a mountain lane. The problem was, he had never learned to fire a bazooka and the bazooka was a two-man weapon anyway. Before long a monster Tiger tank rolled around the bend in the road where he lay hidden. He fired once and disabled the tread and then opened fire on the fleeing occupants. Only one survived and he ordered him to lay face down in the mud while he slowly reloaded the bazooka and took out the other tank. An infantry platoon nearby was sure that they had met the main American force and threw up their hands. The soldier returned to camp with two destroyed Tigers under his belt and 34 prisoners captured single-handedly, keeping the road open and his unit from being surrounded.

There were actually more events than I have space to report here. In all the soldier won the Silver Star medal for bravery three times, a Bronze Star, Purple Heart, and bravery medals from France and Belgium. His European Theater ribbon had six battle stars. The soldier's commanding officer told the reporter that he should have won the Medal of Honor at least once, but with his behavioral record the only way he could've gotten it was to perish on the battlefield.

So, 70 years later, this young reporter was asking me for help in finding out what happened to this soldier from Oklahoma City. Unfortunately, we've both been stumped in finding out his fate. It seems his name was Private John Smith. If you know anything about this remarkable, unsung hero, please let me know and I can pass it along.

Americanah

by Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie

reviewed by Elisabeth Wright

Ifemelu and Obinze fall in love as teens growing up in Nigeria, but then both flee their military-ruled homeland for the West. Ifemelu goes to America to study at a university. Obinze hopes to join her, but is denied a visa. He manages to make it to London, where he faces a situation typical of an illegal immigrant, including menial work and eventual deportation. Meanwhile, Ifemelu grapples with the realities of being black in America. Her struggles to find work, her romantic relationships and other experiences, lead her to begin writing a provocative blog about race in America. After many years, she feels that she has lost her way and she decides to return to Nigeria, a country still in political turmoil. Perhaps, after all this time, a reunion with her first love, Obinze, is still possible.

Americanah is a love story, intimately drawing us into the lives of Ifemelu and Obinze. But Americanah is also a searing social commentary, reaching widely across three continents and multiple decades. Particularly effective is the discussion on race in America. Ifemelu's blog pulls no punches, and her position as non-American black gives her a unique outsider perspective. Adichie manages something few authors can: to both challenge your thinking and move your heart.

Americanah is available in print and audio disk.

Elisabeth Wright is the Young Adult Librarian at The Village Library. She'll never catch up on her "to-read" list, but that doesn't stop her from trying.

The Heart Goes Last

by Margaret Atwood

reviewed by Alexis Whitney

Margaret Atwood's The Heart Goes Last is the story of Charmaine and Stan, an average couple from the northeastern U.S. After an economic collapse, they lose their jobs and must live in their car. Charmaine picks up work as a bartender, while Stan struggles to find odd jobs. This life is dangerous, because there are violent gangs prowling about, stealing and hurting people. Then they learn about a new community that has opened up nearby. It's a combination town/prison experiment. People enter with nothing and are given houses and jobs. But there's a catch: in alternating months they live in the prison. While they're in prison, other people live in their house. Everything seems great initially, because living under a roof certainly beats sleeping in a car and narrowly escaping being robbed or killed daily. But they start to realize something sinister is happening. No one can leave, and no one ever seems to die. Residents are constantly monitored, and questioning anything is discouraged.

Fans of Margaret Atwood won't be disappointed by her latest.

The Heart Goes Last is available in print, large print, audio disk, audiobook player, eBook and eAudiobook.

Alexis Whitney is the lead librarian at the fabulous Southern Oaks Library. She is usually reading three or four books concurrently, which makes her stay up way too late at night.

Little Roja Riding Hood

By Susan Middleton Elya

Illustrated by Susan Guevara

reviewed by Christopher Stofel

I've been familiar with Elya's work for quite some time so her newest fairy tale redux immediately caught my attention when I spied it on the shelf at Wright Library. In this clever retelling of an old childhood classic, but with a multicultural, bilingual twist, our modern Little Roja travels by ATV through the woods to her abuelita's house with soup caliente and cellphone in hand and proves she needs no hunter to help her vanquish el lobo.

The best thing about this book (and Elya's others including Rubia and the Three Osos), is the inclusion of Spanish words throughout the story. This does not detract from the flow or the rhyme scheme of the story but in fact enhances it. By doing this, Elya has managed to bridge a cultural gap and has provided structure for language development for both Spanish- and English-speakers. Spanish-speaking children will appreciate and find comfort in the frequent use of Spanish words and English-speakers will increase their Spanish skills while enjoying a new version of an old tale.

I read this book at story time and kids and parents alike enjoyed this revamped version of Little Red Riding Hood. Susan Guevara's illustrations garnered this book a 2015 Pura Belpre Award nomination for illustrations and a glossary of Spanish words is included.

Chris Stofel is manager of the Harrah, Jones, Luther, Nicoma Park, and Wright libraries. When not managing small but powerful libraries, he can be found searching for Oklahoma-made pottery to add to his collection, exploring cemeteries, and curled up with a good book and his two cats.

Rosemary Cottage: a Hope Beach Novel

by Colleen Coble

reviewed by Phyllis Davidson

Rosemary Cottage, owned by the Lang family, sits on an island along the banks of North Carolina. Amy Lang returns there to investigate her brother's death. Ben's drowning was ruled accidental, but Amy isn't buying that. While there, Amy becomes friends with Curtis Ireland. His sister, Gina, was hit by a boat and killed while swimming. As Amy and Curtis begin to uncover disturbing details of their siblings' lives in the time just before their deaths, they realize that someone will stop at nothing to prevent them from discovering the truth.

To complicate matters, Ben has custody of Gina's baby, Raine. Her birth certificate names Ben Lang as the father, but Curtis is reluctantly keeping that information from Amy. Amy's father is rich, powerful and ruthless, and Curtis knows he will stop at nothing to gain custody of baby Raine. As their relationship grows closer, Curtis struggles to determine if he can trust Amy not to join in with her parents' efforts to tear Raine away from him? Rosemary Cottage is book two in the Hope Beach trilogy. Although it could be read as a stand-alone, I recommend Tidewater Inn, book one, as an equally enjoyable read. I look forward to book three, Seagrass Pier.

Rosemary Cottage: a Hope Beach Novel, is available in print, large print, eBook and eAudiobook.

Phyllis Davidson is a reference librarian at the Downtown Library. She is the editor of a family newsletter, teaches genealogy classes to customers at the library, and delves into her own family history outside the Library walls.

What Is Visible: a Novel

By Kimberly Elkins

review by Jana Hausburg

“Yes, little Miss Keller and I will rattle on about our lives in our respective cells, and since I can’t taste or smell either – she’s got that on me – she can tell me how the succor of roast mutton and strawberries and the odor of feces and chrysanthemums have opened enormous windows of happiness and universal feeling that I will never enjoy.”

As one who’s been cursed with hypersensitivities, I’ve often wished (albeit briefly) for a dulling of the senses. After reading this book, however, I’ll be curbing those types of thoughts.

The main character in Elkins’ novel, taken directly from history, was cursed with a lack of senses: scarlet fever robbed Laura Bridgman of her sight, hearing, and the ability to smell and taste. Before Helen Keller, it was Laura who enjoyed the oddest kind of celebrity. She charmed the likes of Charles Dickens, Dorothea Dix and John Brown, yet was utterly dependent on her savior, Dr.

Samuel Gridley Howe, founder of the Perkins School for the Blind.

Laura’s boundless intelligence can only be expressed by the mediation of another trained in fingerspelling. Her rich inner world is hidden; most view her as a curiosity or freak. Her sense of touch is hyper-realized. She grasps at anything and anyone with her reach, searching to understand, be understood, be loved.

Elkins describes Laura’s terrifying isolation, and provides an outlet for Laura’s inner voice to become audible: full of humor, rage, courage and insight.

What Is Visible is available in print and audiobook player.

With her incredible book knowledge and sharply-honed survivor skills, Jana Hausburg is humanity’s best chance in a zombie apocalypse. She is also the manager at the Capitol Hill Library.

More Than Words

The Come Read with Me program shows children that time spent reading means more than words.

The day-ending school bells have rung, but in classrooms around Oklahoma City students are reading books and enjoying storytimes in after school sessions with volunteers and guidance from the Metro Library's Come Read with Me program.

"The program is a unique opportunity for the library to go out in the community and create an environment for kids to fall in love with reading," said Angie Walton, program coordinator. "We provide quality, age appropriate reading materials and knowledgeable volunteers and facilitators who create excitement about books."

The concept is simple. Volunteers choose a site, then come in and read with kids after school or on school breaks. Children also have the opportunity to read aloud to volunteers or peers. Not only are they reading or listening to stories, but they are also getting nurtured with one-on-one attention. It's about caring for people in your community through a magical conduit: the written word.

Aaron Weast, who grew up with a mom who was a school librarian, recognized that the program was about more than the opportunity to encourage reading. It was about making a difference in the life of a child.

"The difference is that somebody outside the school system cares enough to come in and say, 'I made time for you,'" said Weast, a Come Read with Me volunteer and Chik-fil-A restaurant owner. "I think the kids buy into the idea that somebody cares enough about them to come and sit with them and take a journey through a book," he said.

The program's success is dependent on volunteers. Over the summer, Heritage Hall student and writer, Luke Williams, spent time volunteering at the Downtown YMCA site.

"One day, the children I had read to the week before came into the room with huge smiles on their faces. They were headed straight for me. I knew right away that something truly special was happening ... in just one week this had become my group. From then on, I read to the same children, allowing us to get to know each other. I truly began to care for them and it became increasingly important for me to instill in them one of the most basic beliefs that I will always hold true: there are wonders to be worked with the written word," Williams wrote in the Charger Call Online, the school's online newspaper.

Spring sessions will begin Feb. 1 and continue until Apr. 28. To learn more or to volunteer, contact Angie Walton at angela.walton@metrolibrary.org or call 606-3838. To sign up to volunteer online, go to www.metrolibrary.org/comereadwithme.

Making Smarter Communities

Looking for a way to be generous to your community? Create the most impact for future generations with a gift to the Library Endowment Trust. The LET gives generous donors the opportunity to be a part of increasing educational and social opportunities for children, families and community caregivers.

In 2011, my grandmother, Marcel, passed away. She was an avid reader, especially during her retirement years. When visiting her, I would often find her in her recliner with feet propped enjoying a paperback. She loved mysteries and romance novels and always had a book on her side table. In lieu of sending flowers to her funeral, one friend made a donation to The Library Endowment Trust in her honor. It touched me deeply to know that my grandmother's memory and love of reading would be used to add value to my community.

The LET accepts gifts in any amount and uses donations to broaden access to information and enhance the quality of life. Funding supports programs for senior citizens, beginning adult readers and those learning English as a second language through access to materials, classes, events and other resources. Early literacy projects and programs that support teens also benefit from LET funding.

For 14 years, the LET has planned an annual fundraising dinner called Literary Voices™ that brings high profile authors to Oklahoma City. Library supporters have had the opportunity to hear best-selling authors like political satirist P.J. O'Rourke, two-time-Pulitzer Prize winning author, David McCullough, famed mystery giant, Mary Higgins Clark and former first lady Laura Bush. In 2016, award-winning journalist, best-selling author and documentary film director, Sebastian Junger, will bring his front line reporting experience to attendees for an inspirational night. The Literary Voices dinner in 2016 will be held at the Oklahoma City Golf and Country Club April 14 at 7 p.m. Tickets are available at www.metrolibrary.org/literaryvoices/ or by calling 606-3760. Sponsorship opportunities are also available.

Childhood Love of the Library Leads to Largest Gift

A lifelong love of reading drew LaVerne Taylor to the library as a child. Each Wednesday, staff at the Belle Isle Library would set aside books she liked for her weekly visit. As LaVerne grew, her love of reading did too. At age 93, she was still coming to the Belle Isle Library on a regular basis, and the staff embraced her as family.

"We would have her mysteries and James Patterson books ready for her and carry her books out to her car," said retired circulation clerk, Regina Wolfinger. "She loved to read. She would check out a big bag of books and she'd read them in a week."

Taylor told former Development Director, Ernestine Clark, that the Belle Isle Library became her salvation when her husband of 50 years passed-away after a battle with cancer in 1988. She mailed a $5,000 check in 2000 and told Clark that there would be more donations to come.

Taylor's love of reading books inspired her to leave $1.4 million to the Metropolitan Library System Endowment Trust. She and her husband, Gordon Taylor, left a legacy for the Belle Isle Library that will serve her community for years to come. In 2014, the Taylors were honored by the American Library Association's United for Libraries with a Major Benefactor Citation.

Tax Help is every Tuesday and Saturday during tax season.

Reviewed by You

The Internet has changed the way we make decisions. Most people want to be educated before choosing to purchase, read or watch something. Peer and professional reviews are an important part of our decision making process in the digital world.

By now you know that our new catalog came with fun features that make finding what you want even easier. A lesser known feature is the addition of reviews within the catalog listings.

Many titles contain editorial reviews but did you know that they can also contain reviews by you? Borrower reviews are a great way to see what readers like you liked (or didn't like) about a title. Even better, they are a way for you to tell fellow readers what you thought about your latest read.

To write your own review, simply search the title in our catalog at www.metrolibrary.org, then click the "Reviews" tab on the left. You will have to log in with your library card and last name to pen your review. Click "Borrower Reviews" and tell the world what you thought! It's that easy to help others make an informed decision and share your thoughts on the latest reads.
