New info

August. Whew, just reading the word makes you reach for a cold, damp cloth and a glass of lemonade.

During the Dog Days, there are certainly warm-weather things you like to do outdoors—or have to do outdoors—but you'll be glad to know that your neighborhood MLS library has lots of cool indoor activities and programs for you as well.

Midwest City Library is starting something new with Basic Japanese classes kicking off on Tuesday, August 9 from 6-9pm. Give them a call for more information.

And how about getting started on that book you've been wanting to write? Check out Belle Isle Library's Writing Workshop: Getting Started on Your Romance Novel on August 16 at 7pm.

But maybe you just want to wind down the summer by reading some good books. You can find interesting book discussion groups at Belle Isle, Choctaw, The Village, and Warr Acres Libraries.

Look through our monthly Calendar of Events in this issue of info and you're bound to find something that looks good to you. After all, August is a great month at MLS.

But then, they all are.

The Great Schoolhouse Race

by Larry Johnson

August means back-to-school for many of us in Oklahoma. Frankly, I'm glad my school days are over. Having to walk to school in 102-degree August heat while cozy, warm sweaters and zip-up turtlenecks fresh from a Penney's back-to-school sale mocked me from their hangars was one of life's greatest annoyances.

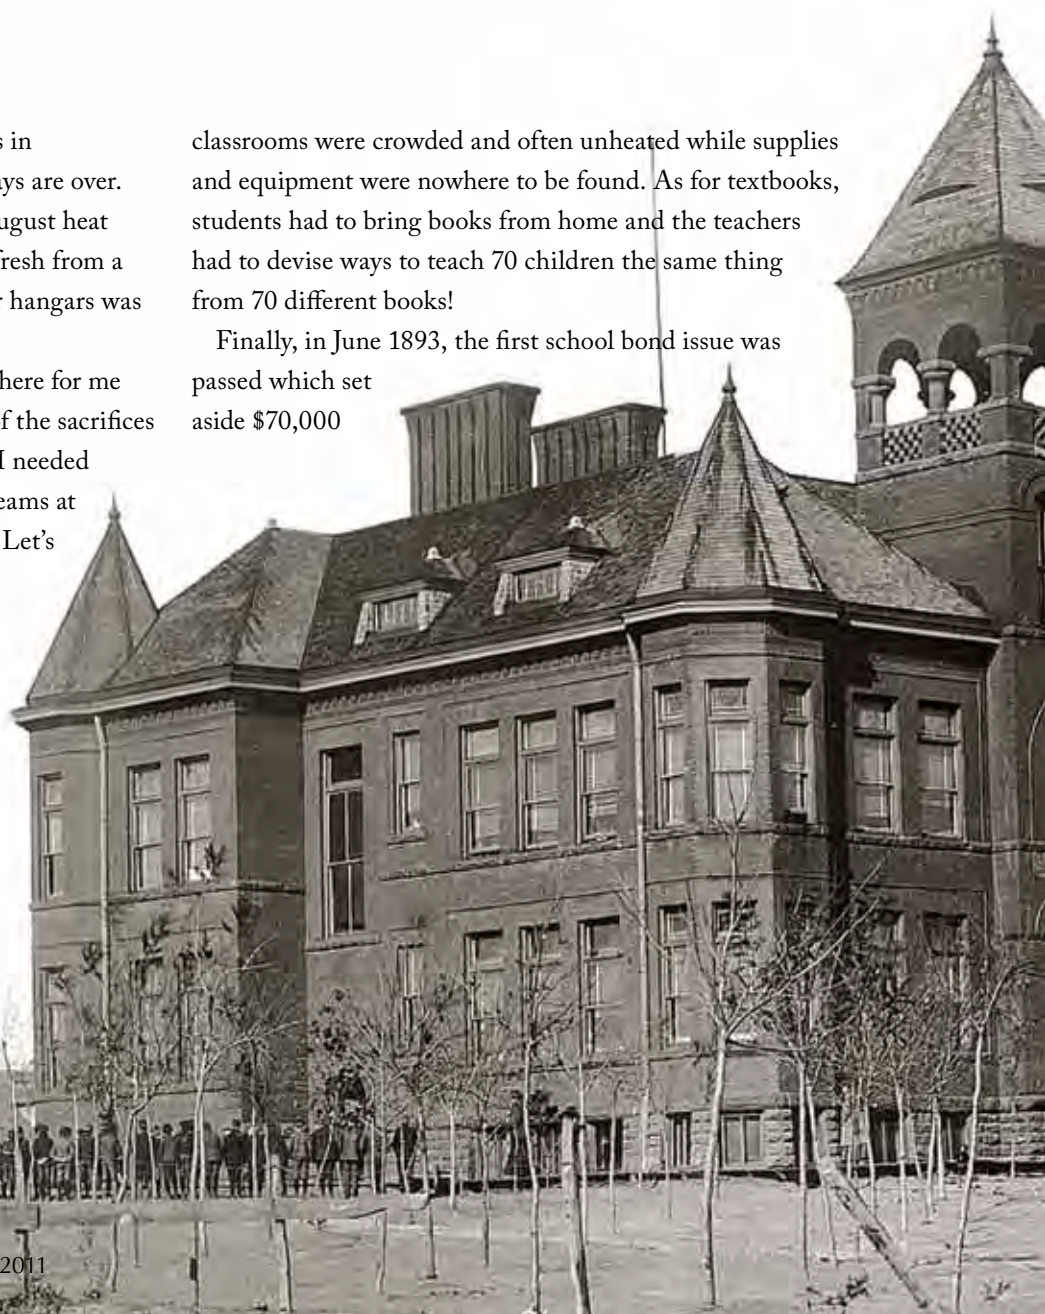

I wasn't then, but am now, glad that school was there for me when I needed it and I'm much more appreciative of the sacrifices my folks made to provide that warm apparel when I needed it. It helps to remember that when my daughter screams at me at the suggestion that she work hard and study. Let's take a look back and see what kind of struggles our ancestors went through to get an education.

Not long after Oklahoma Territory was formed in May of 1890, Oklahoma City created its first Board of Education. The Board provided money for a school in each of the city's four wards. They didn't provide money for new buildings, though, so classes were held in storefronts.

Conditions for learning were grim. The classrooms were crowded and often unheated while supplies and equipment were nowhere to be found. As for textbooks, students had to bring books from home and the teachers had to devise ways to teach 70 children the same thing from 70 different books!

Finally, in June 1893, the first school bond issue was passed which set aside $70,000

to fund permanent buildings for schools. Opponents of the bond issue quickly challenged the legality of the election, an action which tied up the funds until the district court settled the matter. It took until the spring of 1894 to reach a decision, but the court did acknowledge the legality of the election. But in a Solomonic twist of justice, the courts only allowed $45,000 of the bond money to be allocated.

Although there was now only $45,000 to work with, construction on the new schools began in earnest in 1894. The rivalry between the north and south sides of the city had already developed by this time and it showed in the race to see which side could be the first to construct a brick school building in the city. Residents visited the building sites everyday to encourage the construction crews and cheer them on. Parties with no rooting interest took to wagering which side would win and bookmakers did a brisk trade around town.

Emerson, the first northside school, had to overcome an early protest by residents who said it was foolish to build a school so far out in a cornfield, (it still stands at 715 North Walker). Washington School won the race and classes began at the new school at 315 South Walker in the spring semester of 1895. The bill for building these two schools came in at $44,000, just under the $45,000 allocated. If you think you're seeing double in these pictures, it's because they saved money by using the same design. The only difference is that Washington has a curved cap on the tower and Emerson's is straight.

Larry "Buddy" Johnson has been with MLS since 1998. Not only a librarian at the Downtown Library, he is the brilliant mind behind the Oklahoma Images database which is a collection of pictures and essays that illustrate the history of central Oklahoma.

The Hidden Reality

by Brian Greene

reviewed by Lloyd Lovely

Hooray! Brian Greene's latest update of the cosmos is here! Aficionados of physics and the universe need no introduction to Greene; you've undoubtedly been a fan since The Elegant Universe was published, and may have even heard him speak at Oklahoma City University a few years back. He's been the most visible proponent of string theory the last fifteen or so years, a theory that is alive and kicking.

The focus of The Hidden Reality, however, is not string theory, because, after all, we've already gotten over the shock of that. Now it's time for a new shock, and this time it's not about the extremely tiny, but about the extremely large, a phrase that doesn't even begin to cover the mind-boggling sizes of what Greene discusses in this book. His topic is multiverses and theories thereof. He reports on the possibilities of multiple universes in no less than nine different theories, or scenarios, in which infinite numbers of infinite universes are not only possible, but likely.

Keep an open mind and be prepared for some heavy thinking. So many interesting ideas about life are presented that my review could go on and on, but my editor is already groaning about my excessive verbiage. Just read the book. (You've probably already read it in another universe!)

This title is also available from MLS as a compact disc Audiobook, as an Adobe EPUB eBook, and as an OverDrive WMA Audiobook.

Lloyd Lovely is the MLS Deputy Executive Director for Finance and Support, which makes him feel important. Please don't tell him the truth.

CheeZecoat

by Shea Weaver and Andy Hunt

reviewed by Melissa Weathers

Sometimes children's music can drive you nuts, but local musicians Shea Weaver and Andy Hunt have created a children's rock CD that kids and parents can enjoy together. The album, CheeZecoat, includes 13 songs kids will sing along with and will make parents laugh out loud.

Having a rambunctious three-year old, I'd have to say that my favorite song on this CD is "Wonder What Happens at Three". What parent hasn't counted to three to get their kids to stop misbehaving or to do what they've been told? In this song, the kid wonders what exactly would happen if his mom actually got to three, and yet he doesn't want to know. "Sometimes if it's really bad, I might even hear two and a half!"

There are many children's songs about body parts, but this is the first one I've heard about the belly button. The "Belly Button Song" asks what exactly a belly button is for. "Well my Momma said when I was a baby in her tummy it was kinda like a straw, and that's how she fed me. That's weird, and it might be true somehow. But that doesn't tell me what it does now." "Go Green" gives ideas on how to recycle. "Recycle, reduce, and reuse helps the animals, plants, and me, and you" will get kids thinking about how they can recycle.

What children's CD would be complete without a song about the potty? "The Pee-Pee Dance" is very catchy and fun. My only warning is that you might not be able to get it out of your head.

Melissa Weathers is a Materials Selector for the library system. She purchases the music CDs and children's nonfiction books. She enjoys playing with her two sweet boys.

A Singular Woman

by Janny Scott

"The Untold Story of Barack Obama's Mother" illuminates what made Stanley Ann Dunham a brilliant combination of her parents, just as Barack Obama grew to have qualities of both of his parents and his maternal grandparents.

Dunham was raised mostly in Kansas, but her father uprooted his family frequently, once to Ponca City, eventually to the newest state, Hawaii, where the population was international and tolerance was king. Though his ancestors were named after Emerson and Jefferson, he achieved greatness only through his progeny. Ann's mother was the parental phenom, organized and dependable, a bank vice-president in the day when that just didn't happen.

Ann embraced the spirit of Hawaii, where she met both of her husbands. She married a Kenyan (Obama's father), and later an Indonesian, and lived half her life in Indonesia as an anthropologist, reviewed by Marilyn Backus

researching economic discrimination against women, and developing policy for microfinance banking projects decades before the idea won the Nobel Prize for some of her collaborators.

She was unflappable, smart, generous, funny, and devoted, but agonized over her choices as a single mother, particularly how they affected her son, who, she always believed, was capable of greatness. To her children, she finally said, "If nothing else, I gave you an interesting life."

This title is also available as an OverDrive MP3 Audiobook and as an Adobe EPUB eBook.

The Insane Train

by Sheldon Russell

A fire in the ramshackle Baldwin Insane Asylum kills thirty boys. After the mass burial, Dr. Baldwin determines that he must move the patients from California to an abandoned fort in Oklahoma. Because of the war raging in the Pacific, it is difficult to hire helpers and even more difficult to procure sufficient rail cars to transport a large group of people. Some of the patients are criminally insane and have been kept in tiny cells at the asylum.

Hook Runyon, a railroad security agent, doesn't let his prosthetic arm keep him from tackling anyone who trespasses on railroad property, and he doesn't let it keep him from agreeing to provide security for what becomes known as the "Insane Train." Of course, part of his motivation may have been the pretty young nurse, Andrea Delven, who gives up her home to move to Oklahoma with the patients. The railroad company provides Hook with some old cars that are mostly fit for the junk yard, and he enlists helpers from among the WWII vets at the hobo village. The patients are drugged, chained, and loaded onto the cars for the trip. Soon things begin to go terribly wrong. This is the second book in a series that begins with The Yard Dog, which earned a starred review in Booklist. I think you'll be just crazy about it.

The Memory Palace

by Mira Bartok

reviewed by Kelley Riha

"For years I had kept my life secret from my schizophrenic and homeless mother. So had my sister, Natalia. We both changed our names, had unpublished phone numbers and addresses."

What could have separated these sisters from their mother, Norma? The bond between parent and child can be smooth as silk or a torrential clash of the titans. Initially, it is Norma's oncoming mental illness that drives the sisters to escape in order to save their own sanity. Mira focuses on her career as a visual artist. Her artistic sense draws a parallel between the heron's ability to fly and Norma's brilliant career as a child prodigy on the piano; pointing to the fragility of life and our delicate sense of who we think we are.

In The Memory Palace, fleeting memories flow as currents under Mira's life and connect her to a mother she is ashamed of. After a car accident, Mira suffers a traumatic brain injury and it is through her rehabilitation that she can see her mother's outlandish behavior in a new light.

After news of Norma's failing health reach them, Mira and her sister see perhaps the last opportunity they may have to reassure their mother that they love her—but will they be able to forgive her?

Read The Memory Palace and you will truly appreciate your mother like never before.

If You Were Here

by Jen Lancaster

reviewed by Kim Terry

If you are a child of the '80s, chances are you're obsessed with everything John Hughes. Whether it's Ferris Bueller's Day Off ("Bueller? Bueller? Bueller?") or Pretty in Pink ("Blane? That's not a name. That's an appliance."), we learned a lot from John Hughes. So when fellow Hughesite, Mia, finds that Jake Ryan's house (16 Candles) is for sale, she's determined to buy it.

Mia, who writes a bestselling teen series about zombie Amish teenagers in love, looks past the '80s décor of mirrored walls and rooms covered in mauve and teal wallpaper. And her husband Mac is ready for a great renovation project... after all, doesn't years and years of religiously watching HGTV qualify them?

When two toilets fall through the second floor, they decide to hire a professional contractor to do the remodel. But when Vlad, from the former soviet state of "Somewhere-istan," doesn't show up after a few days on the job, Mia and Mac are back to the ultimate DIY project. Money quickly dwindles and Mia spends a few nights in the city jail (grateful for the hot showers). She tries to keep her sanity with help from her kitten, Agent Jack Bauer, and weekly visits to John Hughes' gravesite for therapeutic "discussions."

Jen Lancaster's first foray into fiction is a quick, fun read that is perfect for reading poolside... or when taking a break from your current DIY project.

This title is also available as an OverDrive MP3 Audiobook.

The perpetually accident-prone Kim Terry is the Director of Marketing and Communications at MLS. She knows the only good thing about a broken leg is it gives her more time to read.

The Man Behind the Images

Just who, you may ask, is this guy who knows so much about Oklahoma City history and writes the “Oklahoma Images” feature in info magazine every month? He wears many hats—librarian, historian, author, publisher, husband, dad, and rabid baseball fanatic. He’s Larry Johnson, known to all as “Buddy,” and he can be found working one of the Information Desks at the Downtown Library.

He describes himself as being “tough on the outside and soft inside.” Well, maybe he’s not so much tough as a little cynical, the historian’s occupational hazard. He was born in Yukon in 1966, and moved to Tulsa at age three; he’s lived in 19 Oklahoma towns including Cushing, Owasso and Seiling, “but,” he says, “I consider Tulsa/Broken Arrow to be my homeland.”

A graduate of Southern Nazarene University, Johnson is the author of six books of historic photos, one about Harry Truman, and he’s currently preparing one which will contain photos of Oklahoma City in the 1950s, ‘60s and ‘70s.

In addition to “Oklahoma Images,” he is also the writer of the “Oklahoma Moments” series of anecdotes MLS created to celebrate the state’s centennial in 2007, and which can be accessed through our website.

He and his wife Pam Bracken, a professor at SNU, founded the 46th Star Press in 2008 to publish books about Oklahoma. “Pam and I have vastly different interests, but the publishing is something we can do together. So far we’ve brought out six books, with a new one on African-American heroes of Oklahoma due in the fall.”

Ask Johnson how he got so involved in local history and he’ll tell you that sometimes he’s the most surprised guy in the room.

“I was originally oriented toward European history after 1618 but became interested in local history when I began working at the Downtown Library. I don’t have a romantic or sentimental feeling about central Oklahoma and that makes my writing about its history a lot less rose-colored.”

His favorite era of local history is the 1910s, an era of progressive politics in Oklahoma, and his biggest surprise is that the city was founded here at all and has managed to not only survive but prosper. “Given the expanse of the prairie,” he explains, “the North Canadian River was the only water there was. This just doesn’t look like the best spot to create a city, but history can surprise you.”

Larry Johnson

Hit The Road With A to Z Maps Online

A GPS system is great and, if nothing else, it gives you someone to talk to on long road trips.

But sometimes, nothing beats a map and if you don't have a standard road map handy, that's when you log on to the MLS website at www.metrolibrary.org and go to the area that contains our databases. When the list of databases comes up, the one at the top is A to Z Maps Online. Now you are ready to roll.

Where do you want to go? Well, sooner or later everyone wants to take the scenic route to Dewey to visit the Tom Mix Museum. How do you do it? Which way do you go?

First, you know you want to go to the Modern Map Collection. You can get there by clicking on "U.S. State Maps." Then you select the state you want to explore. Click on Oklahoma and a variety of map choices pops up. You have everything from simple outline maps—great for students and teachers who want to fill in roads, physical features, and points of interest—to political maps (road maps), physical maps (natural earth features, like rivers, deserts, etc.), and thematic maps (precipitation, population density, etc.).

Back on the home page, the map choices are not limited to U.S. states.

The entire Modern Maps collection contains over 5,000 maps, and if you want to do a little time traveling, the Antique Maps collection adds over 5,000 more.

You can also explore country maps, continent maps, and world maps. You can look at hurricane maps, climate change maps, Holy Land maps, NASA maps, volcano maps—even bird and tree distribution maps.

The entire Modern Maps collection contains over 5,000 maps, and if you want to do a little time traveling, the Antique Maps collection adds over 5,000 more. Need a map of Indian Territory in 1884? We got it. Doing a little research on the Civil War? The Military Battles and Campaigns Collection contains 10 maps of the Antietam Battlefield alone.

What we're saying is that A to Z Maps Online has just about any kind of map you need or want, modern or antique. You can save any of them to your computer, or print them off to carry with you in the car if you don't want to take your laptop or iPad. And it's all free.

Now, as for that trip to Dewey:

Go north on 35 to old Route 66, then east through Arcadia and Luther and on to Stroud. When you get to I-44 you hop on for a short ride up to Tulsa, then take 75 north to Dewey. The museum is located at 721 N. Delaware. Just follow your map and the road signs. You won't get lost.

Off the Beaten Path

... Discovering New Literary Treasures

Getting tired of a constant diet of best sellers and book club hype? Want to take a look at what librarians read? Here are two favorite books as selected by MLS staff.

Bullard, Thomas E. The Myth and Mystery of UFOs.
001.942/B9359m

Another summer of movie UFOs and aliens is winding down, and perhaps some of these cinematic sightings have piqued your curiosity about whatever is at the core of the belief in mysteries from the skies. If so, Bullard's book is an intelligent examination of just what the heck is going on up there. He doesn't provide any solid answers, but he's perfectly willing to acknowledge that the questions are worth asking.

Hagerty, Jack and Jon Rogers. The Saucer Fleet.
791.43615/H144s

This book examines a handful of movies and TV shows that featured flying saucers as primary ingredients. Each film is given the full treatment—plot synopsis, production anecdotes, and lots of photos—but the difference between this and the standard issue film book comes in the careful examination of the space craft(s) displayed on screen. The section on Forbidden Planet, for example, comes with complete schematics of the ship from the movie. This is uber-nerdism, and only you know if it's right for you.

We're here to serve you.
