

WEEK THREE: USE A PERSONAL TOUCH AUGUST 26, 2013 SERVICE PRINCIPLES NEWSLETTER

This week our focus is on the Service Principle “Use A Personal Touch”.

The key to having the knowledge of what delights our customers and co-workers is ACTING ON IT— making it happen! When we do this, we create loyal customers and employees and lifetime friends.

11. I Welcome Every Customer I greet every customer with sincere enthusiasm using the 15/5 Rule: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At 15 feet, make eye contact and SMILE • At 5 feet, maintaining eye contact, greet the customer by name, if known, and the time of day greeting (Good morning, good afternoon, good evening) 	12. I Use Telephone Etiquette I answer the telephone professionally: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> -Within three rings and with a smile in my voice • Using the customer's name, when appropriate • Asking the caller, "May I please place you on hold?" • Allowing the caller to end the call 	13. I Focus on Individual Needs I offer information and services relevant to each customer's specific needs by: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Proactively offering options & suggestions • Asking the right questions • Demonstrating warmth, compassion, and empathy 	14. I Personalize the Visit I watch and listen in order to: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Learn customer's preferences • Remember them • Offer assistance at every level • And acting upon them when possible 	15. I make Every Customer Feel Valued I am friendly to every customer in my presence by: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Stopping all other work and conversations • Making eye contact and smiling • When appropriate, asking if I can help • Using their name • Saying thank you
--	--	--	---	---

DISCUSSION STARTERS:

Having a clear picture of who you are, what you do and why you do it can increase your customer service skills like nothing else. When your purpose is clear in your mind, you will live up to the calls to provide exceptional service.

What is the purpose of the Library System? What is your role in creating a customer experience?

Something to think about...

What Do Customers Really Want?

by Kevin Stirtz

It's a question we should always ask and yet we often find so difficult to answer.

How an organization handles this question (and the answers) will determine its ultimate success. Because if you consistently offer your customers what they want (at a price they feel is fair) you'll have all the customers you can handle.

A recent survey of about 2,000 people from all over the USA asked them all this question:

"When you are a customer, what do you want?"

Here are the results of the Group Customer Service Survey:

"What Do Customers Really Want?"

1. Listen to me
2. Know more than I do (about your product or service)
3. Be easy to work with
4. Give me what I came for
5. Smile
6. Tell me your name
7. Acknowledge my presence
8. Don't treat me like I'm an interruption
9. Show me you care
10. Don't waste my time
11. Be honest
12. Offer alternatives if you don't have what I want
13. High quality and low prices
14. Don't try to sell me. Just help me
15. Do what you say you're going to do
16. Keep me informed

(The results are in ranked order from most popular response.)

Use this list to discuss this week's Service Principles. Do you do all of these things for your customers? If not, why not?

The more you give your customers what they want, the more loyal they will be. This list can help you give your customer what they want.

DID YOU KNOW?:

Telephone Greetings that Customers and Employees Love-

by Mary Sandro

Talk about first impressions; telephone greetings are critical. Prospects are deciding whether or not to do business with you. Irrate customers are deciding how helpful and competent you are. Yet many companies convolute the telephone greeting to the point that employees hate saying it and customers and prospects dread listening to it. There is power in simplicity. For best results, incorporate three easy elements: pleasantry, brevity, and sincerity.

Pleasantry

A pleasant greeting is essential to a successful call because it sets the stage emotionally. In general, listeners tend to mirror or “catch” the emotional states of speakers. This is a principle of communication that holds true whether one is speaking to a group of 1000, a small meeting of 10, or a single customer over the telephone. In other words, people respond in kind. If we answer the phone gruffly, chances are the caller will become gruff. If we answer the phone pleasantly, chances are the caller will be pleasant, and we all know which caller is easier to work with.

Imagine you are a customer calling a place of business. The professional on the other end of the phone sounds irritated. What is your response to a greeting like that? When I'm a customer, my response tends to be irritation. I start thinking to myself, “Well, you think you're irritated now? Wait until you get finished with me, then you'll know what irritation is!” I wasn't even irritated when I called the company. I simply caught the professional's irritation.

I've had the opposite experience as a customer too. I am irritated, highly irritated. I really want to let somebody have it. I call the company, but the person who answers the phone is so nice and professional I can't bring myself to yell at them. I hate when that happens. This time I've caught their professionalism.

One of the easiest ways to attain an emotional state quickly, like being pleasant, is to use body language. Research conducted by John Grinder and Richard Bandler suggests that body language helps create emotional states. If we carry ourselves with slumped shoulders, frowning face, bowed head, averted eyes, and shallow breathing, we will probably feel depressed. If we smile, breathe deeply, pull our shoulders back, and look straight ahead, we will probably feel good. How do you carry yourself all day at work?

I recommend that professionals establish a ritual before answering the phone. In order to sound pleasant, we need to be carrying ourselves accordingly. My ritual is to sit up on the edge of my seat, pull shoulders back, take a deep breath, smile, let the phone ring twice, then answer. I never answer my phone unless I've gone through my ritual. My business is too important. Sometimes I'll even stand before I answer the phone if I need an extra jolt of energy. Stand on your head. Do jumping jacks. Do whatever is necessary to attain a pleasant state before answering the phone. (Within limits of course.)

Sincerity

No scripts. I am against scripting greetings because they sound insincere, irritate callers, and discourage employees. Scripted greetings usually include some kind of slogan. “Hello. It’s a beautiful day here at the XYZ Company.” Now I don’t care where you work. It can’t be that good all day. At some point saying, “It’s a beautiful day...” is going to be a stretch or insincere. The other risk is that the caller is irate. An employee from a furniture company confided to me that she hated answering the phone, “It’s a beautiful day...” because irate callers would snap back, “Well it’s not a beautiful day where I am and get over here and fix this thing!” Is it any wonder why employees and customers hate scripted greetings?

You want the greeting to be natural, which also makes it easier to sound pleasant consistently. The key elements of a telephone greeting are: department or company name, your name, an offer of assistance. An example of a switchboard greeting might sound like this, “XYZ Company, this is Bob. How may I direct your call?” A greeting from someone in the accounting department might sound like this, “Accounting, this is Bob. How may I help you?”

State the company or department name so that customers and prospects know they are in the right place. How many times have you been five minutes into a call only to realize the caller would be better served in another department? Always state your name because it is a sign of authority. Stating your name implies that you are accountable. It also creates a personal touch. Lastly, end with a question that expresses your desire to serve the caller.

Brevity

Keep it short. I have heard telephone greetings that are so long, I feared the person answering the phone was going to hyperventilate and go into cardiac arrest trying to get it out in one breath. Excessively long greetings are unprofessional for many reasons. They don’t sound pleasant or sincere because technically they are impossible to execute. Employees hate them and those feelings come through. Callers hate them because they waste their time. Fortunately, by following the guidelines above brevity is assured.

Summary

Telephone greetings are a powerful part of doing business. To be successful, keep greetings simple. Practice a ritual to be pleasant. Remain unscripted. Be brief.

DISCUSSION STARTERS:

What are you doing to create an experience for your customers?

First, define what the experience is for your customers. That is tough, because an experience is intangible. It is the sum of tangible parts, but the outcome is more of a feeling than anything else.

“When the offering becomes more intangible, the value becomes more tangible.”